TIFFIN, OHIO, FRIDAY, JULY 23, 1858.

Original Poetry.

For the Tiffin Tribune. THE OLD MAID. Alone, alone, no friend is near. No soothing words fall on her car. No lips proclaim that she is dear, None wipes away the falling tear.

Alone! alone, she plods her way-No youthful smiles around her play, Or prattling tongues from day to day, To make her heart all bright and gay.

Alone! she cries, is my and fate, I know it now, but 'tis too late, I can but grieve, and bills the bate Corval with my wrotehod state.

Alone' alone, when and, or ill, No lover's steps my besom thrill. No vows to break—none to fulfill, Except, to pay my Doctor bill.

At twilight hour, when lovers meet, No manly form I haste to greet, No whispered yows, with love replots, Cause my warm beart with joy to beat.

Alone, to church, to shop, to bank, None ask my name, address or rank, My memorandum's quite a blank, It bears no name like Jake, Joe, Frank.

And still alone my path I trace, While time woors forcews down my face, And leaves upon my head a space, And in my heart a vacant place.

I view myself in sad surprise, And watch my boauty as it dies; I raise my "spec's" to wipe my eyes, And choke my murmurs when they rise.

Alone I live, and when I'm dead. No tears will o'er my grave be shed, Or wild flawers, twined above my head. Or marble slab mark out my bed.

No one will ask, where I am laid, No one will care how I'm arrayed; None will know, where my grave is made,
